Native Pollinator Plant ID Workshop planned

Are you interested in attracting pollinators, including butterflies and bees, to your yard? Join Jake Wyatt from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m. Sunday, Sept. 11 at Salamonie Lake's Interpretive Center, 3691 S. New Holland Road, Andrews. Participants will learn how to identify native plants essential to Indiana pollinators. Jake Wyatt, an Indiana Master Naturalist, will share his knowledge of native plant species. Wyatt is a Huntington County native whose hobby and passion for native versus ornamental species covers many years. There will be an introductory indoor presentation about the importance of supporting native pollinators with native plants. An outdoor hands-on learning session will view native plants and pollinator species in their natural habitats. Dress for the weather, there will be some walking to locate plants. There will also be caravanning to locations within Lost Bridge West. The cost is $10 per person. Space is limited. Advance registration is required by calling 260-468-2127. The workshop is expected to last at least two hours and will be held rain or shine. For more information, visit <https://on.IN.gov/salamoniellake> or dnr.IN.gov.

World pays tribute to Queen Elizabeth II

By ANDREW MELDRUM
Associated Press

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — Across the globe, the death of Queen Elizabeth II has prompted reflections on the historic sweep of her reign and how she succeeded in presiding over the end of Britain's colonial empire and embracing the independence of her former dominions.

Tributes to the queen's life have poured in, from world leaders to rock stars to ordinary people — along with some criticism of the monarchy.

It was in Cape Town, marking her 21st birthday in 1947, that the then-Princess Elizabeth pledged that her "whole life, whether it be long or short, shall be devoted to your service and the service of our great imperial family to which we all belong."

The British empire soon crumbled, but Elizabeth managed to maintain a regal — if ceremonial — position as the head of the Commonwealth, the 54 nations of mostly previous British colonies.

"The Queen lived a long and consequential life, fulfilling her pledge to serve until her very last breath at the age of 96," Cape Town mayor Geordin Hill-Lewis, said Friday. "She was an exemplary leader of the kind seldom seen in the modern era."

As queen, Elizabeth was seen as endorsing the birth of democracies in former colonies in Africa where Black citizens previously had been denied basic rights, including the vote. When in glittering tiaras she danced with new African leaders in the 1960s and visited their capitals, she burished their new institutions.

When white-minority rule finally fell in South Africa in 1994, Elizabeth welcomed Nelson Mandela as a world leader. Her warm friendship with Mandela gave her a new relevance.

"In the years after his release from prison, (Mandela) cultivated a close relationship with the queen. He hosted her in South Africa and visited her in England, taking particular delight in exploring Buckingham Palace. They also talked on the phone frequently, using their first names with each other as a sign of mutual respect as well as affection," the Nelson Mandela Foundation said Friday.

"For Madiba, (Mandela's clan name) it was important that the former colonial power in southern Africa should be drawn into cordial and productive relations with the newly democratic republic of South Africa."

Fellow anti-apartheid fighter of the late Anglican archbishop of Cape Town Desmond Tutu also enjoyed good relations with the queen.

"Although ensconced in the pomp, ceremony and lifestyle of royalty and empire, in a world of profound inequality, she was a servant queen," Tutu's foundation and trust said Friday.

In contrast, a scathing view of the queen's rule was issued by South Africa's populist party, the Economic Freedom Fighters. The queen was "head of an institution built up, sustained, and living off

Registration is available in person the morning of the 13th annual Dam to Dam (D2D), said Visit Wabash County content manager Biz Bishop.

The ride takes place on Sunday, Sept. 11, and is sponsored by INGUARD. "The inception of the ride began with Dr. William Rauh and eight of his friends in 2010," said Bishop. "Rauh wanted to celebrate a milestone birthday by doing something near and dear to his heart, cycling."

Bishop said during the inaugural birthday ride, nine cyclists rode 92 miles of the original Wabash County

The event is geared toward cyclists of all riding levels and ages and gives participants the choice between riding anywhere from 15 to 150 miles.

Wabash County AACTION to hold community meeting

Organization will introduce available funding to combat teen alcohol, drug misuse

By ROB BURGESS
Wabash Plain Dealer Editor

A local organization will hold a community meeting next week to introduce available funding to combat teen alcohol and drug abuse, said Wabash County Tobacco Free Coalition (WCT-FC) director Dan Gray.

Gray said the Wabash County AACTION organization will meet at 4 p.m. Thursday, Sept. 15 in the Bowen Center Community Room, 255 N. Miami St.

"The purpose of this meeting is to introduce available funding that is accessible to organizations that provide prevention and education, treatment and intervention and law enforcement and justice services to adults who misuse alcohol and illicit drugs and the underage use of alcohol, tobacco and e-cigarettes and illicit drugs in Wabash County," said Gray.

Gray said AACTION "is committed to identifying the needs of the county regarding tobacco, drugs, and alcohol abuse. AACTION monitors programs which are recipients of Drug-free Indiana funds and act as a resource in Wabash County for tobacco, drug, and alcohol information."

Most recently, the WCT-FC held a special event for August's First Friday celebrations downtown.

Gray said the "Prevent, Recover, and Rock Together" event was planned "to keep Wabash County aware of the impact illicit drugs and tobacco have on our communities."

City plans fall clean-up dates for October

This is not the WCSWMD's "Tox-A-Way Day," which 'will be announced at a later time'

By ROB BURGESS
Wabash Plain Dealer Editor

It's that time of year again, as the city of Wabash's fall clean-up dates have been announced, said mayor's coordinator Maria Smyth.

Smyth said this year's dates have been planned from Monday, Oct. 3 to Saturday, Oct. 8. All items should be curbside by 6 a.m. on the day of residents' weekly trash route. Piles are to be no larger than 4 feet by 8 feet.

Smyth said a dumpster will be located from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday, and 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday behind the Wabash County Solid Waste Management District (WCSWMD), 1101 Manchester Ave., "for residents not wanting to place items on curbside."

"Proof of city residence will be required," said Smyth.

Smyth said the following items will not be accepted for curbside disposal by the Wabash Street Department: Batteries, paint, petroleum products, chemical,

DAR promotes Patriot Day observance

Holcomb directs flags to be flown at half-staff on Sunday

By ROB BURGESS
Wabash Plain Dealer Editor

Patriot Day will be observed Sunday, Sept. 11, and will mark the 21st anniversary of the 9/11 attacks.

Gov. Eric J. Holcomb has directed flags at state facilities across Indiana to be flown at half-staff in honor of Patriot Day, said press secretary Erin Murphy.

Flags should be flown at half-staff from sunrise to sunset on Sunday, Sept. 11.

"Holcomb also asks businesses and residents statewide to lower their flags to half-staff in remembrance of the victims of the terror attacks on Sept. 11, 2001," said Murphy.

Patriot Day was first observed in 2002, after the proclamation by President George W. Bush.

"On Sept. 11, 2001, ordinary Americans performed extraordinary acts of heroism. Firefighters and police officers rushed into crumbling buildings and raging fires to save others. EMTs, construction workers, colleagues, and strangers tended to the wounded. Passengers and crewmembers gave their lives to thwart another attack. And a generation of women and men answered the call of duty by joining our Armed Forces to defend our freedom and our democracy," stated President Joe Biden on Friday, Sept. 9, in part of a proclamation honoring the holiday. "These patriots — people of undaunted courage,

King Charles III, in first address, vows ‘lifelong service’

By DANICA KIRKA,

and SYLVIA HUI
Associated Press

LONDON — King Charles III vowed in his first speech to the nation as monarch Friday to carry on Queen Elizabeth II’s “lifelong service,” as Britain entered a new age under a new sovereign. Around the world, the queen’s exceptional reign was commemorated, celebrated and debated.

Charles, who spent much of his 73 years preparing for the role of king, addressed a nation grieving the only British monarch most people alive today had ever known. He takes the throne in an era of uncertainty for both his country and the monarchy itself.

He spoke of his “profound sorrow” over the death of his mother, calling her an inspiration.

“That promise of lifelong service I renew to all today,” he said in the recorded, 9 1/2-minute address, delivered with a framed photo of the queen on a desk in front of him.

“As the queen herself did with such unwavering devotion, I, too, now solemnly pledge myself, throughout the remaining time God grants me, to uphold the constitutional principles at the heart of our nation,” he said.

The king’s speech was broadcast on television and streamed at St. Paul’s Cathedral, where some 2,000 people attended a service of remembrance for the queen. Mourners at the service included Prime Minister Liz Truss and members of her government.

As the country began a 10-day mourning period, people around the globe gathered at British embassies to pay homage to the queen, who died Thursday at Balmoral Castle in Scotland.

In London and at military sites across the United Kingdom, cannons fired 96 shots in an elaborate, 16-minute salute marking each year of the queen’s life.

In Britain and across its former colonies, the widespread admiration for Elizabeth herself was occasionally mixed with scorn for the institution and the imperial history she symbolized.

On the king’s first full day of duties, Charles left Balmoral and flew to London for a meeting with Truss, appointed by the queen just two days before her death.

He arrived at Buckingham Palace, the monarch’s London home, for the first time as sovereign, emerging from the official state Bentley limousine alongside Camilla, the queen consort, to shouts from the crowd of “Well done, Charlie!” and the singing of the national anthem, now called “God Save the King.” One woman gave him a kiss on the cheek.

Under intense scrutiny and pressure to show he can be both caring and regal, Charles walked slowly past flowers heaped at the palace gates for his mother. The mood was both grieving and celebratory.

The seismic change of monarch comes at a time when many Britons are facing an energy crisis, the soaring cost of living, the war in Ukraine and the fallout from Brexit.

As the second Elizabethan Age came to a close, hundreds of people arrived through the night to grieve together outside the gates of Buckingham Palace and other royal residences, as well as British embassies worldwide. Some came simply to pause and reflect.

Finance worker Giles Cudmore said the queen had “just been a constant through everything, everything good and bad.”

At Holyrood Palace in Edinburgh, mourner April Hamilton stood with her young daughter, struggling to hold back tears.

“It’s just such a momentous change that is going to happen,” she said. “I’m trying to hold it together today.”

Everyday politics was put on hold, with lawmakers paying tribute to the monarch in Parliament over two days, beginning with a special session where Truss called the queen “the nation’s greatest diplomat.”

Senior lawmakers will also take an oath to King Charles III.

Meanwhile, many sporting and cultural events were canceled as a mark of respect, and some businesses — including Selfridges department store and the Legoland amusement park — shut their doors. The Bank of England postponed its meeting by a week.

But while Elizabeth’s death portends a monumental shift for some, day-to-day life in Britain went on in other respects, with children in school and adults at work, facing concerns about inflation.

Charles, who became the monarch immediately upon his mother’s death, will be formally proclaimed king at a special ceremony Saturday. The new king is expected to tour the United Kingdom in the coming days.

a brutal legacy of dehumanization of millions of people across the world,” it said.

“We do not mourn the death of Elizabeth, because to us her death is a reminder of a very tragic period in this country and Africa’s history,” said the party. “During her 70-year reign as queen, she never once acknowledged the atrocities that her family inflicted on native people that Britain invaded across the world. She willingly benefited from the wealth that was attained from the exploitation and murder of millions of people.”

Some Irish soccer fans raucously cheered the queen’s death at a match Thursday, according to videos posted online that angered her supporters. The Republic of Ireland’s leadership expressed condolences and admiration for the queen.

The widespread tributes that followed her death came not only from U.S. President Joe Biden but also from Russian President Vladimir Putin.

She was a “stateswoman of unmatched dignity and constancy who deepened the bedrock alliance between the United Kingdom and the United States,” Biden and first lady Jill Biden said, adding that she “defined an era.”

Putin sent a telegram to King Charles III — Elizabeth’s oldest son who automatically became Britain’s new monarch.

“For many decades, Elizabeth II rightfully enjoyed the love and respect of her subjects, as well as authority on the world stage. I wish you courage and perseverance in the face of this heavy, irreparable loss,” Putin wrote.

Elizabeth was mourned across Europe. In France, Britain’s historic rival and contemporary ally, flags at the presidential palace and public buildings were lowered to half-staff on Friday.

French President Emmanuel Macron released a video Friday in English expressing a sense of “emptiness” after her passing. Addressing the British public, he said: “To you, she was your Queen. To us, she was THE Queen, to all of us.”

In the U.S., tributes came from every living former president.

Barack Obama and his wife, Michelle, said Elizabeth made “the role of queen her own — with a reign defined by grace, elegance, and a tireless work ethic.” George W. Bush called her “a woman of great intellect, charm, and wit,” and Jimmy Carter said Elizabeth’s “dignity, graciousness and sense of duty” were inspiring.

Even in places where the relationship with British monarchy is complicated, the tributes flowed. In India, once a British colony, Prime Minister Narendra Modi called Elizabeth “a stalwart of our times.”

The queen’s death came as a growing number of British territories in the Caribbean are seeking to replace the monarch with their own heads of state amid demands that Britain apologize for its colonial-era abuses and award its former colonies slavery reparations.

Still, Caribbean leaders mourned her. Jamaican Prime Minister Andrew Holness said for many years Elizabeth visited the island every decade.

“Undoubtedly, she formed a special bond with the people of Jamaica,” he said. “We are saddened that we will not see her light again, but we will remember her historic reign.”

Bermuda Premier David Burt noted that her reign “has spanned decades of such immense change for the United Kingdom and the world.”

Elizabeth was also sovereign to 14 other countries including Jamaica, Canada, Australia, the Solomon Islands and New Zealand.

“Here is a woman who gave her life, utterly, to the service of others. And regardless of what anyone thinks of the role of monarchies around the world, there is undeniably, I think here, a display of someone who gave everything on behalf of her people,” New Zealand Prime Minister Jacinda Ardern said.

In Canada, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau said he was having trouble believing he’d had his last sit-down chat with Elizabeth: “I will so miss those chats,” he said. Elizabeth had visited Canada 22 times as monarch.

For most Canadians, we have known no other sovereign,” Trudeau said, his eyes red with emotion. He said she was a “constant presence in our lives — and her service to Canadians will forever remain an important part of our country’s history.”

Former Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull, who led a failed campaign to have an Australian president replace the British monarch as Australia’s head of state, came close to tears in paying tribute to Elizabeth.

“It’s the end of an era and let’s hope that the future, after the queen’s passing, is one where we will have leadership as dedicated and selfless as she has shown,” Turnbull told the Australian Broadcasting Corp.

In China, Elizabeth’s death was a top trending topic on social media.

“I feel quite sad,” said Bao Huifang, a lawyer in Beijing. “She played a very important role in stabilizing Britain and the world.”

Chinese President Xi Jinping sent his condolences, noting Elizabeth was the first British monarch to visit China.

Elizabeth’s death comes amid increasingly tense relations between Britain and China. Xi said he was willing to work with King Charles III on promoting “healthy and stable” bilateral ties.

Obituaries

Mary ‘Ellen’ Mitchell

Feb. 22, 1947 – Sept. 6, 2022

Mary “Ellen” Mitchell passed away peacefully on Sept. 6, 2022. She was born to Elaine and Henry Holquist on Feb. 22, 1947. She graduated from Oak Park River Forrest High School in 1965. She earned a bachelor’s and master’s degree in Physical Education.

Many remember Ellen for her passion for fitness as a community aerobics instructor and physical education teacher at Wabash City Schools, where she retired after 43 years of service to the profession. She provided countless women and teens with encouragement and self-confidence to pursue life-long fitness through her work. Ellen additionally enjoyed gardening, traveling, and spending time with family and friends, especially her grandchildren. Her sense of humor and contagious smile will be missed by all who knew her. Ellen is survived by her husband, Rick Mitchell, her son, Jay (Cait) Mitchell, and daughter, Tara (Andy) Kingsley, along with her five grandchildren. Ellen is also survived by her siblings, Robert Holquist and Sue Holquist Traub. She is preceded in death by her parents and sister, Terri O’Connor.

Visitation hours will be 9:00 – 10:45 am, Saturday, Sept. 17, 2022 at Grand-staff-Hentgen Funeral Service, 1241 Manchester Avenue, Wabash, followed by a memorial service at 11:00 am at St. Bernard Catholic Church, 207 Cass Street, Wabash. The family wishes memorial contributions to be made to the Lewy Body Dementia Association @ lbda.org/donate, or LBDA 912 Killian Hill Road, S.W. Lilburn, GA 30047.

Holcomb directs flags to be flown at half-staff in honor of Queen Elizabeth II

Gov. Eric J. Holcomb is directing flags in the state of Indiana to be flown at half-staff in honor and remembrance of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, according to press secretary Erin Murphy.

Per President Biden’s order, flags should be flown at half-staff immediately until sunset on the day of interment. Holcomb is asking businesses and residents in Indiana to lower their flags.

for cyclists,” said Bishop. “This tour focuses on spending time with friends, enjoying food, and seeing all the beautiful countryside that Wabash County offers. Over the last 13 years, this event has transformed from nine riders to nearly 1,000 riders in the last decade, attracting cyclists from 24 different states.” Bishop said one of the original cyclists from Rauh’s birthday ride, IN-GUARD CEO Parker Beauchamp, “is committed to supporting the event at the title sponsorship level.” “Intensity is part of the culture at INGUARD,” said Beauchamp. “Encouraging people to exceed their own expectations for themselves in these events is something we are proud to support.”

Bishop said the event is geared toward cyclists of all riding levels and ages and gives participants the choice between riding anywhere from 15 to 150 miles.

Bishop said the event is organized by Visit Wabash County staff “with the help of a dedicated group of committee volunteers.”

“Amy Ford, David Mann, Greg Garner, Adam Stake-man, John Trimble, Shelly Baucco, Mike Paul and Roger Peebles work tirelessly to ensure that the event is a success year after year,” said Bishop.

Bishop said volunteers may be found throughout the county running several “supply and gear” stops “that are catered specifically to anticipate the various needs of each cyclist.”

Bishop said the Wabash County Emergency Management Agency (EMA), the Wabash Street Department, the Wabash Parks

Department, the Wabash Police Department, North Manchester Parks Department, North Manchester Town Manager Adam Penrod, the Wabash County Sheriff’s Department, the Wabash County Highway Department, the Wabash County YMCA and Mayor Scott Long, “collectively work together to ensure the overall safety of the event.” “D2D is a true testament to how remarkable Wabash County is,” said Visit Wabash County Executive Director Christine Flohr. “If it weren’t for all of the sponsors and the hundreds of volunteers coming together to serve as ambassadors for Wabash County, this event could not happen.”

Bishop said registration includes breakfast, lunch and a commemorative T-shirt, “thanks to this year’s sponsors.”

Bishop said registration will be $60 per person, but that riders under the age of 18 will ride for free “thanks to sponsorship.”

During their annual progress presentation at a December 2020 Wabash City Council meeting, Visit Wabash County executive director Christine Flohr said in 2019, the Dam to Dam Century Ride attracted nearly 800 cyclists to Wabash County from 18 different states across the U.S. Flohr said Dam2Dam was “one of those events where we had to pivot” as it changed to being a freestyle event that year due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

The D2D committee and Parkview Wabash Hospital also announced the annual “Liking for Biking” riding series which began in May and lasted through August.

Don't let candidates hide their views on abortion

This weekend is traditionally considered the start of campaign season in earnest. Iowans must discern how the representatives they send to Des Moines and Washington will seek to treat girls and women through policy on abortion.

Many restrictive options are on the table for the first time in decades, thanks to June rulings by the Iowa and U.S. supreme courts. It can't be enough for candidates to, as they might have in the past, say they are "pro-life." It is up to us to find out what they mean by that.

For instance, "pro-life" politicians almost certainly support forcing women and girls to either deliver children they can't afford to raise or spend time and money traveling somewhere with fewer restrictions. ... But do they also support potentially sentencing other girls and women to death if doctors are too afraid of violating a ban to administer emergency medical care? Do they support forcing others to confront the prospect of litigating the parental rights of their rapist and/or abuser?

Lest these ideas be labeled hyperbole, those scenarios are the real-life consequences of abortion restrictions already in place in other states.

In the next two months, what can Iowans do to better define the stakes of the Nov. 8 election? We have a few ideas.

If "pro-life" means denying needed medical care or forcing child rape victims to carry pregnancies to term, candidates should say so. The history of GOP legislative majorities in Iowa — repeated attempts to erect barriers to abortion care, even when the state courts called it a fundamental constitutional right — makes reasonable a presumption that anybody running as a Republican would support complete bans without exceptions. It's the responsibility of Republican candidates who don't agree to make the distinctions of their views explicit.

These are some of the details that reveal unsavory results of restricting abortion. Candidates should be pressed about them whenever possible:

If an abortion is performed in Iowa that violates a state restriction, should the doctor be criminally prosecuted?

Should the woman?

What about people who help the girl or woman?

Is a fetus a person, legally?

How should restrictions apply to in vitro fertilization and unused embryos?

Have Alabama, Arkansas, Idaho, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas and Wisconsin gotten it right by banning abortion in almost all circumstances?

Should abortion restrictions have exceptions for rape and incest? If so, how would they work? Would the burden be on women — and girls — to prove they were abused?

Should abortion restrictions have exceptions for the mother's health? If so, how would they work? How would you address the incentive such laws can create for doctors to deny care to girls and women in dire health so long as their life is not in immediate jeopardy?

What is a medical emergency for a pregnant girl or woman?

Iowans must also consider where prospective county prosecutors stand on abortion in November. Would successful candidates expend investigative resources on punishing violations of a ban on abortion without exceptions?

Iowa Republicans enjoy advantages of incumbency, name recognition, fundraising success, voter registration and polling leads. But some Iowans who are likely to vote for Republicans also favor keeping abortion legal in many circumstances, according to consistent results in the Des Moines Register/Mediacom Iowa Poll.

Those voters should be well-served to know exactly what the Republican, Democratic and other candidates on their ballots would vote for when it comes to abortion.

The simplest way to maintain and restore rights for Iowa women and girls is for Americans to expand Democrats' majorities in Congress in November. Democratic Party leaders have explicitly pledged to write some of Roe v. Wade's principles into law if that happens. Whatever justifiable frustrations that progressive activists have with Democratic politicians, this is the most promising scenario for this fall's elections when it comes to individual rights. In Iowa, even though it hasn't happened often in recent cycles, electing Democrats to state office is just as important.

To put it another way: Yes, the best course for Iowa would be to elect a governor, legislators and other officials who respect women's autonomy and choose not to intrude unnecessarily on health care decisions. An anti-abortion candidate does not become more palatable merely by acknowledging that bans can be particularly dangerous and dehumanizing in certain circumstances.

But waiting until January, when the Legislature convenes, to find out exactly what blithe "pro-life" stances meant is not appetizing, either. It could easily be tragic. And that's why it's important to determine and publicize exactly what freedoms Republican majorities would restrict. Voters deserve to know the answers now.

Discarding half a century of abortion rights in our country should not be done lightly; it demands a thorough understanding of what we are gaining, if anything, and of what we are giving up.

All of us should take responsibility to hold candidates accountable.

Congress should pass legislation to prevent suicides and support crisis care

September is National Suicide Prevention Awareness Month. As a volunteer advocate with the American Foundation for Suicide Prevention, I am calling on my members of Congress to pass legislation to prevent suicides and support crisis care.

All of those "back the blue" and military "loving" members of Congress, those within the various halls of justice, those that speak about patriotism and being a "true" American as they boast flag pins, lining their own pockets while they actively offer and do nothing for veterans and service members. Please do what is necessary and helpful.

The 988 Suicide and Crisis Lifeline must be sustainably funded so that confidential, voluntary services by trained counselors are accessible. H.R.7116, the 988 Implementation Act, would provide federal funding and guidance to states for 988 crisis services across the nation.

An alternative to 911 for mental health crises, 988 connects callers to Lifeline centers. These centers de-escalate 98 percent of crisis calls without dispatching emergency services. Well-resourced crisis support systems can connect callers with local resources, including someone to talk to (call centers), someone to respond (mobile crisis teams), and somewhere to go (crisis stabilization centers). We must ensure that every state can provide comprehensive crisis response services to help save lives.

For more information, visit afsp.org/988. Join me in urging Congress to take action to #StopSuicide.

Lingering effects of COVID on work

a reasonable explanation for the big loss of labor force participation is that Baby Boomers work past retirement age at much higher rates than do older generations. So, for the past two decades, much of the increase in labor force participation came from Baby Boomers.

Today, about 70 percent of the total loss of workers post-COVID came from Baby Boomers, who are not today 25 percent of the labor force. So, it is clear older workers either left work or retired early in pretty large numbers as a consequence of the disease. Again, this could be due to risk but the astonishing rise in stock prices doubtless convinced many it was time to retire.

To understand other problems, we must observe what state variation did to labor force participation. There are several factors to consider. Death rates from COVID varied remarkably by state. Florida, for example, had a death rate that was twice that of Indiana's. While Florida had a higher share of adults aged 65 or older, a little statistical modeling work reveals that the older age share of the population explains only a small share of the labor force decline.

Labor markets could also be influenced by the type of state response to the pandemic. Too restrictive — the business-employee relationship might have been severed. Poorly executed — state laws would result in higher disease incidence, more death and morbidity. Again, Florida is a good place to consider, particularly since Florida's governor is thought by many to have responded well to the crisis.

Florida's COVID death rate was stunningly high compared to Indiana's, and their labor force participation rate today is a full 4 percentage points below that of Indiana. Today the overall unemployment rates in both states are the same, and both are still below their pre-COVID labor force. Perhaps there is something else at play on labor market outcomes.

Oxford University has created a nice index of COVID restrictions they call the severity index. This is the list of restrictions placed on state and local governments by state leaders. It is part of an international effort to understand the cost and benefits of public health measures. On this scale, Indiana ranks 2nd nationwide as having the least restrictive COVID rules. Florida isn't near Indiana on that ranking, doing no better than sixth place.

Indiana had half the death rate, with far less restrictive policies than did Florida. When it comes to the mix of governments restrictions, Indiana had what was arguably the best statewide response. I believe this was largely due to respect for federalism, which allowed local governments, particularly schools, to adjust their approach as local conditions warranted.

This is critical because prime working-age deaths from COVID were much larger than most Americans think. COVID killed almost 3,000 prime working-age Hoosiers (aged 20 to 59), and more than 10,000 Floridians in the same age group. Florida's death rate among prime working-age adults was more than 15 percent higher than Indiana's, or 1,500 extra deaths.

It must also be said that Indiana's state response was almost wholly focused on the wellbeing of Hoosiers. In the decades to come, historians and economists will study this in more detail. I think it is early enough to conclude a few important things. In what was clearly the biggest crisis to face any state since the Civil War, Indiana's response was among the most effective in the nation.

COVID also affected survivors of the disease. A recent Brookings study reports that about 1.6 million workers are out of work due to long-term complications related to COVID. Indiana's share of that would be about 1,500 more prime-age workers. Whether or not this remains a problem will depend on the ongoing severity of individuals suffering from lengthy inability to work due to the disease.

Finally, the disease imposed huge costs on home caregivers. School closures, and the disease itself left, many households with new duties at home. Women bore the brunt of this. The labor force participation rate of women plummeted in the early days of COVID and has failed to return to pre-COVID levels. Some of this may be due to choice, to either remain home with children or to continue to provide care to an ill family member.

What isn't clear is how these outcomes affect families. Beyond the obvious negative effects of death and morbidity, many of these changes are benign or positive. A worker's choice to retire is just that, a choice. If a family wishes to forego some earnings to pursue home schooling or to stay at home with young children, that is a choice. Having choice is the essence of a free market economy, and the policy role lies primarily in expanding choice, not deciding for folks.

The loss of older workers has also resulted in wage increases, particularly at the bottom rungs of the income scale. This is a rare moment when the demand for workers outstrips supply sufficiently to see it in the wage data. That is a rare silver lining to a deep and saddening period in world history.

GRETCHEN'S TABLE

Photos by Gretchen McKay / Pittsburgh Post-Gazette / TNS
“Fish-fragrant” eggplant gets a spicy kick from a sauce made with Sichuan chili bean sauce and Chinese black vinegar.

Fish-fragrant eggplant

By GRETCHEN MCKAY
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette (TNS)

I’m a sucker for eggplant in any form, but really adore it in Chinese food, especially when it’s tossed in a spicy garlic sauce accentuated with the gentle heat of chili. So the second I saw the cover of Hannah Che’s stellar new cookbook, “The Vegan Chinese Kitchen,” man, did I squeal in delight.

The picture of her Sichuan “fish-fragrant” eggplant is so luscious-looking that less than a day later, in absolute heaven, I was working my way through a steaming bowl of the dish with chop sticks. “If you aren’t a fan of eggplant, it’s because you haven’t had this dish yet,” she writes in the recipe’s headnotes, and she is absolutely right: heady with garlic, with a punch of spice from red chili and fresh ginger, it’s an absolute winner.

The eggplant is stir-fried to a golden, crispy finish before being braised in the sauce, resulting in creamy, delectable bits of eggplant that melt in your mouth.

If you’re turned off by the word “fish” in the title, don’t be. It doesn’t actually include any. Rather, it refers to the pungent aromatics often associated with Sichuan fish cookery. The sauce is sweet, sour and spicy all at the same time, with noticeable bits of chopped ginger, garlic and scallion.

The dish works as a side or a main, when served with rice. You can find Chinkiang black vinegar (made from glutinous rice) and chili bean paste (a spicy, deep-red paste made with pickled red chilies and fermented broad beans) at Asian markets.

- ‘Fish-fragrant’ Eggplant
For sauce
1/2 cup unsalted stock of any kind or water
1 tablespoon sugar
1 tablespoon soy sauce
1 tablespoon Chinkiang black vinegar
1/2 teaspoon potato starch or cornstarch
For eggplant
1 pound long Chinese or Japanese eggplants (about 3-4 small)
Kosher salt
Vegetable oil, for frying
1/2 cup potato starch or cornstarch
1 1/2 tablespoons Sichuan chili bean paste or pickled chili paste
1 tablespoon finely chopped garlic
1 tablespoon finely chopped fresh ginger
2 scallions, thinly sliced, white and green parts kept separate

Make sauce: In a small bowl, whisk all the sauce ingredients until blended. Set aside.

Cut the eggplants lengthwise into 3-inch sections, then slice them into 1/2-inch wedges. In a large bowl, combine 3 cups water and 1 1/2 tablespoons salt and whisk until salt dissolves, then submerge eggplant and let soak for 15 minutes. Drain and pat wedges dry. (Salting helps relax the flesh, reduce any bitterness and prevent it from soaking up excessive oil.)

Heat about 1 1/2 cups oil in a wok or skillet over medium-high heat. Coat eggplant lightly in potato starch or cornstarch. When the oil reaches 375 degrees, fry eggplant in batches, flipping and turning it occasionally to cook evenly, until edges are slightly golden and skin is glossy purple and wrinkled, 3-4 minutes. Transfer cooked eggplant to a paper towel-lined plate. (Reserve oil for another use.)

Return the wok to the stove over medium heat, add 1 tablespoon reserved oil and add the chili bean paste. Stir-fry over low heat until its red oil is released, about 30 seconds. Add garlic, ginger and scallion whites and stir-fry until just aromatic, about 30 seconds more. Push aromatics up one side of wok and pour the sauce mixture in the center.

Gently fold the fried eggplant into the sauce and simmer for about 2 minutes, until the eggplant has absorbed the flavors and the liquid is thickened from the starch.

Transfer to a plate, garnish with scallion greens and serve immediately.

QUICK FIX

No need for constant stirring with this ‘risotto’

By LINDA GASSENHEIMER
Tribune News Service (TNS)

This mock “risotto” takes only 10 minutes to make and doesn’t need constant stirring. Instead of using traditional rice for the risotto, I use orzo, a rice-shaped pasta, and a large nonstick skillet for this quick meal. The orzo has a creamy texture when cooked this way. Using a large, nonstick skillet instead of a saucepan increases the surface area so the orzo cooks faster and doesn’t stick. There’s no need for constant stirring as with a rice-based risotto.

While the risotto boils, the scallops are sautéed. Sweet, tender scallops need very little cooking. In fact, to remain delicate and flavorful, they should be cooked only a few minutes over high heat in a skillet large enough to hold them in one layer without touching. The result will be a crusty coating while the inside remains juicy.

- Seared Scallops
3/4 pound fresh, large scallops
1 tablespoon canola oil
Salt and freshly ground black pepper

Pat scallops dry with a paper towel. Heat oil in a skillet over-high heat. When smoking, add scallops and sauté 2 minutes, turn scallops over and sear 1 minute. Add salt and pepper to taste.

Quick Spinach and Tomato ‘Risotto’

- 1 1/2-cups no-salt-added chicken broth
1 cup water
2/3 cup orzo
1/4 cup crumbled blue cheese
Pinch cayenne pepper
Salt freshly ground black pepper
2 cups washed, ready-to-eat baby spinach
1 tomato cut into cubes (about 1 cup)
1/4 cup grated Parmesan cheese

Heat a large nonstick skillet over medium-high heat. Add the chicken broth and water. When liquid is boiling, add the orzo and blue cheese. Stir to bring back to a boil and cook 8 minutes. All liquid should be absorbed and orzo soft. Boil a little longer if needed. Remove from heat and stir in the cayenne pepper and salt and pepper to taste. Mix in the spinach and tomatoes. Stir until spinach starts to wilt. Divide between 2 dinner plates and sprinkle Parmesan cheese over both.

She paid off student debt days before relief announced – she has no regrets

Patricia Young made the last payment on her daughter’s federal student loans on Aug. 8.

Then, on Aug. 24, President Joe Biden announced a one-time forgiveness program that will wipe out up to $10,000 in federal student loan debt and up to $20,000 for Pell Grant recipients for individuals who earn $125,000 or less per year, or less than $250,000 for married couples.

Young, of Clinton, Md., doesn’t have any regrets about paying off the loans.

She took advantage of the payment pauses enacted during the pandemic to pay off $12,000 in loans interest-free. Although there had been discussions at the time about loan forgiveness, Young said she wasn’t waiting to see if it would happen.

“I just said, let me keep throwing money at the debt and get it down.”

Young’s daughter graduated from the University of Maryland Baltimore County in 2019 and did postgraduate work at the American

Like many other borrowers who could afford to continue making payments, Young saw a tremendous opportunity to aggressively pay down her daughter’s education debt. Despite the pause, more than 9 million borrowers with Education Department-held loans made payments between April 2020 and June 2022, according to a Department of Education spokesperson.

Now that the loan forgiveness plan has been announced, some regret their aggressive debt reduction. They are taking advantage of a loophole allowing them to claw back their payments and put the refunded loan amount back on the lenders’ books so they can then apply for forgiveness under Biden’s plan.

While they took advantage of the zero-interest relief, these borrowers now want to benefit from this newest loan forgiveness.

It might work like this. Say you paid off $10,000. You call up your loan servicer and ask for a refund for the $10,000. You get the money back, and your loan is reinstated to $10,000. Then you apply for forgiveness under the Biden program.

What people are doing is technically allowed. Borrowers have one year to apply for a refund for payments made during the payment pause that began on March 13, 2020, according to the Education Department.

What’s been killing folks is how student loan interest can increase the loan balance over time. Interest that is not paid through forbearance or deferral gets added to the principal, and then interest is charged on the new, larger balance.

Every time the government extended the student loan pause program, Young said it allowed her to pay down more of the principal. She decided to pay $300 per pay period – $600 per month. With the interest rate on the loans at zero percent, all her payments went directly to reducing the loan principal.

After her two July payments, the balance was down to $208.18, which she paid in August.

Young said she’s already benefited from the covid emergency relief.

“The one good thing that came out of covid was that they paused the interest payments,” she said. “Well, that gave me time to pay back the money.”

Many people requesting refunds intending to take advantage of Biden’s loan forgiveness are not struggling financially. They didn’t lose their job during the pandemic. They had more disposable income because pandemic shutdowns reduced their spending on eating out or other discretionary expenditures, freeing up money to pay off their loans.

As my grandmother Big Mama used to say, you can be right and be wrong.

Should you take advantage of the refund loophole?

Yes, request a refund if you truly need it.

But, as a taxpayer who will be footing the bill for this new loan forgiveness, I appreciate Young’s decision.

“My daughter used the money to get the education. She got a degree. I don’t really feel like I should even go through the process of trying to take advantage of the relief that they are giving people now,” Young said. “I could pay back the money, and it was a blessing that I was able to do it. I was in the position financially that I could pay it back.”

By the way, just because you made payments and are seeking a refund doesn’t mean your loan is eligible for cancellation.

“They would still need to meet the income threshold of below $125,000 for individuals or $250,000 for married borrowers,” the Education Department spokesperson said.

There’s so much discourse over Biden’s loan forgiveness plan. Some people are bitter that borrowers are getting their loans forgiven. Others feel the forgiveness is fair after struggling for years under an oppressive amount of debt.

Young is empathetic to both viewpoints. She may not get everything she’s entitled to, but she’s satisfied with the relief she has received.

“For those who do qualify and will have a portion of their debt forgiven, I couldn’t be happier for them because I know what it feels like to have some of that burden lifted from your budget,” Young said.

“The forgiveness is a good start but, in my opinion, the entire student loan process needs to be revamped so that the payments do not become such a burden. But that’s another conversation for another day.”

Politics in air as Biden visits future Intel plant in Ohio

By AAMER MADHANI,
JOSH BOAK
and ANDREW
WELSH-HUGGINS
Associated Press

NEW ALBANY, Ohio — President Joe Biden steered clear of partisan politics at Friday’s groundbreaking celebration for a huge new computer chip facility in Ohio — as a tough Senate contest in that state and a Democratic candidate seeking to distance himself from Biden reflected the challenge of translating White House policy wins into political gains.

Biden, a major force behind the legislation that helped lure Intel, went to suburban Columbus to take a victory lap just as voters in the state are starting to tune in to the Senate race between Democratic Rep. Tim Ryan and Republican author and venture capital executive JD Vance. They’re competing in a former swing state that has trended Republican over the past decade.

Ryan attended the event but raised questions in interviews about whether he thinks Biden should pursue re-election in 2024. Vance did not attend.

The president, in his speech, thanked Ryan for his leadership without mentioning his Senate candidacy, choosing instead to emphasize that the Intel plant serves as a model for a U.S. economy that revolves around technology, factories and the middle class.

“Folks, we need to make these chips right here in America to bring down everyday costs and create good jobs,” Biden said. “Industry leaders are choosing us, the United States, because they see America’s back and America’s leading the way.”

Touring the construction site, the president chatted with unionized workers in hard hats and noted his own blue collar credentials, saying, “These are my people, where I come from.”

Intel had delayed groundbreaking on the $20 billion plant until Congress passed the bipartisan CHIPS and Science Act. The plant speaks to how the president is trying to revive American manufacturing nationwide, including in states that are solidly Republican or political toss-ups. Investments for manufacturing facilities in Idaho, Arizona and North Carolina have also been announced in recent weeks.

Factory work is one of the few issues going into November’s midterm elections that has crossover appeal at a time when issues such as abortion, inflation and even the nature of democracy have dominated the contest to control Congress. Biden shared the stage on Friday with Ohio Gov. Mike DeWine and Sen. Rob Portman, two Republicans who stressed in their remarks the value the plant holds in a state with a working class identity.

Ryan, the Democrat vying to succeed Portman, did not take to the lectern even though he championed the computer chip plant. He had largely been hesitant to share a stage with Biden, as appearing with the country’s top Democrat could hurt his chances in a state that backed Republican Donald Trump by eight points in both 2016 and 2020.

“This event will bring attention to parents and young people alike, the responsibility we all have to be aware of what is out there and the resources that are available to combat the drug epidemic in our county,” said Gray.

Gray said the WCTFC is involved together with the Drug Steering Prevention Committee “in prevention that provides resources that are available to help fight against the drug epidemic and give support to those who are seeking recovery.”

“The nicotine in tobacco products and e-cigarettes is an addictive drug,” said Gray. “Any use of tobacco, chew, smoke, or vape, leads to an addiction that can encourage the user to add other forms of drugs to boost their addiction.”

Gray said the event was “an evening of entertainment and information.”

“The nationally-known RALI CARES – Hidden in Plain Sight trailer will be a part of the evening activities,” said Gray. “It is outfitted to look like a teenager’s or young adult’s bedroom, but it is filled with hidden warning signs of substance misuse.”

Gray said former law enforcement and experts will “point out the red flags of substance misuse based on their years of experience and discuss ways to seek help if someone is struggling with addiction.”

“WCTFC is a natural partner for this event,” said Drug Steering Prevention Committee chairman Mike Keaffaber, chairman. “They are engaged in tobacco prevention in our schools and have been a constant resource that combats the drug epidemic by minimizing the use of nicotine. You will see their presence at the event to help anyone who wants to be released from their nicotine addiction. They will also have up-to-date information on tobacco and the impact the e-cigarette has on our young people.”

Gray said the trailer has traveled all over the country educating parents, grandparents, teachers and caregivers.

“Visitors are often surprised by what they see, like common household items that serve as hiding places,” said Gray.

Southwood looks to speed past competition

By CLAY MAXFIELD
Wabash Plain Dealer Freelance Reporter

Southwood's varsity football team put together an off-season of scrimmage and work that they believe will pay dividends come sectional time.

With contests against Sheridan, Eastbrook, Columbus City, Alexandria, Centerville and Lafayette Central Catholic, the Knights managed to get in reps on the field this summer against competition that proved as a measuring stick for Southwood.

For Dave Snyder, Southwood head coach, the ability to see his team line up against other schools throughout the state provided a chance for him and his coaching staff to not only take a look at X's and O's but how they stack up against competition from an athletic standpoint.

"The biggest thing that I look at is do we have the speed to match the bigger schools and most cases, we did," Snyder said. "Central Catholic was probably the best team that we looked at in a scrimmage situation and we were able to compete speed wise with them."

"I always tell the kids, the single biggest thing with better competition is their faster. To me, this is a game of speed now."

As of week two of the regular season, Eastbrook and Lafayette Central Catholic were ranked no. 2 and no. 5 in Class 2A.

Rostering six seniors, the Knights are looking to rely on the experience of players such as Morgan Lloyd who will suit up as Southwood's starting quarterback and Isaiah Sutton who served as one of the Knights' leading rushers last season.

Fellow seniors Nathan Lehner and Cole Winer also fill out some of Southwood's veteran leadership as part of the team's receiving core.

"We have a ton of experience in there. That's where a lot of our athleticism comes from is our senior class," Snyder said.

Those seniors' abilities came up big in a losing effort during their week one opener against Rochester when Morgan Lloyd passed for 237 yards and three touchdowns while Cole Winer hauled in 187 yards receiving and three scores.

Defensively, Snyder feels there will be a shift in the Knights' overall presence on the defensive side of the ball as they return a unit that is not only healthy but also one ripe with experience from a year ago.

"Defense, last year was pretty nonexistent against the run. A lot of it was just injury, young kids and a really small roster. ... We got a lot of kids' experience that way. By Isaiah (Sutton) being healthy, he's our free safety and our defense revolves around our free safety and the play that he does," he said.

"Defensively, I think we're going to be stronger in our front four. We're able to return Jason (Oprisek) up there. It all starts with those four guys up front."

At the end of the day, Snyder and the Knights will fall back on their athleticism, the area they believe will put them ahead of the rest.

"I think we have good speed," Snyder said. "Our skill positions, we got good speed. Our line position, we've got some pretty good athletes up there that can run and I'm a big believer that in most cases, the team with the most speed is gonna win. If you can put some athletes out on the field, you can be dangerous."

MLB adopts pitch clock, shift limits, bigger bases for 2023

By RONALD BLUM
AP Baseball Writer

NEW YORK — Major League Baseball adopted its first pitch clock, limits on defensive shifts and larger bases for next season in an effort to shorten games and increase offense in a tradition-bound sport.

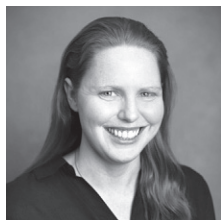

The decision on the clock and shift restrictions by the sport's 11-man competition committee was made Friday over the unanimous opposition of the panel's players, who approved the larger bases. The changes had long been pushed by baseball Commissioner Rob Manfred in an effort to combat the increase in dead time over four decades and suffocation of offense in the age of analytics.

"Throughout the extensive testing of recent years, minor league personnel and a wide range of fans — from the most loyal to casual observers — have recognized the collective impact of these changes in making the game even better and more enjoyable," Manfred said in a statement.

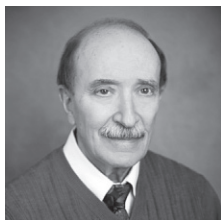

Until last winter, MLB needed one year advance notice to make on-field rules changes without approval of the players' association. The union agreed in the March lockout settlement to establish the committee, which includes six management representatives, four players and one umpire.

Couple ponders reconnection infatuation

DEAR AMY: I have a "second time around" query.

In our late teens some 45 years ago, "Bret" and I shared quite an infatuation. But it cooled when different college choices put 1,500 miles between us. We lost touch (no texting or Face-book back then).

We each married but are now single again, due to my divorce 15 years ago and Bret losing his wife to COVID in 2020. Neither of us had children. Now we're both 63, and we recently connected online. We're feeling a little revived spark of our long-ago romance. Bret thinks we can recapture what we once had.

I'm not as sure about that, more just intrigued at the possibility. I think how in many ways we're very different people today. We're still 900 miles apart but talking about making visits. If we were to explore a re-union, how do we keep a fond nostalgia of yesteryear from clouding or competing with our vision today?

Also, do you think Bret's greater eagerness could be a rebound from losing his wife fairly recently?

He has said he was very close to her, they'd been married for 34 years, and her death hit him hard.

Seems like this too could affect how clear-eyed we (or at least he) will be. I've never had to deal with anything like that, myself, so I'm tossing it over to you. – Intrigued

DEAR INTRIGUED: You are presenting rational and considerate issues. Any (or all) of these could derail a relationship between the two of you.

Men who find themselves single in later life do tend to partner up quickly. People who have been in long and happy marriages naturally want to replicate the experience (and might know how to). Long-lost reunions do not need to be "clear eyed." Fond nostalgia for yesteryear is as good a fantasy as any.

The way to handle this is to ... handle it. Whether you take a mad leap or choose to tiptoe in, you two need to get to know one another as seasoned adults with a lifetime of experiences behind you. You should always trust your own core instincts. Your instincts are the best tools you have to determine if a relationship is right for you.

DEAR AMY: I'm hoping you can give me some insight for compassion.

My mother's name is an odd spelling of an otherwise traditional name.

For instance, say her name is "Lucy" (it's not), but spelled "Lucee."

She gets very upset when people don't get the spelling right (which is often, because I've never seen a similar spelling of this very common name). I understand her attitude about this because that's her given name and she certainly has the right to expect people to get it right.

Here's the rub though – she recently became a grandmother and has declared a very odd spelling of her chosen grandmother nickname.

She has chosen to be called "Nana." She has decided that it must be spelled "Nan'nah."

And she is insistent upon the spelling she has created. Why do this, especially after a lifetime of lamenting people misspelling her name?

I've never cared much about what people called me, let alone how they spelled it. I feel like this is an attention grab on her part – making us parents remember to include apostrophes and weird letters every time we text or write on behalf of our kids.

I understand it's not a huge ask, but I'm just having trouble taking it as seriously as she does. Your thoughts? – Spell It

DEAR SPELL IT: Your mother is doubling down! Sigh.

I agree with you that this comes off as attention-seeking, but on one level, you've got to admire her spunk. (That's your prompt toward compassion.)

Grandparent nicknames aren't used much "in the wild," meaning that this special spelling and errant apostrophe will be confined to your family.

The good news is that once the grandchildren are old enough to write their own texts and notes, this will become their problem, as well as their autocorrect challenge.

Remember – YOU still get to call her "Mom." (Or is it Maw'm?)

DEAR AMY: I must insist that you retract your advice to "Older Woman," the woman you chose to give a pep talk to, when you advised her to have "hot sex." I was alarmed and disgusted by your advice. – Disgusted

DEAR DISGUSTED: I refuse to retract my sex positive advice. Apparently, "hot sex" is the hill I am willing to die upon. (Mom would be so proud.)

HOROSCOPE

SATURDAY, SEPT. 10, 2022

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You can't hurry love, or success. Do not rush the process or recklessly tempt fate. Get some feedback from someone with more expertise and experience before you set the wheels into motion on a new initiative.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Follow your heart. You may become fascinated by something unusual or innovative, but a loved one could feel excluded. Find a balance between marching to a different drummer and working cooperatively.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Someone may marvel at your intelligence when it is simple common sense that is doing all the work. Maximize your enjoyment of the weekend by finishing your tasks early. Put crucial decisions on the back-burner.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Give and forgive. A partner or loved one may not be able to be sensitive to your moods when they are unsettled and feeling competitive. Put the brakes on spending. A financial matter might require your careful consideration.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Traditions can be dependable and comforting, but all things need to change, evolve and grow to remain relevant. Something that seems innovative and original today can become tomorrow's status quo. Learn a valuable lesson; try something new.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Issues that have been building to a peak might come to a head today or soon. If something or someone has continually caused a problem, you may be tempted to make a clean break. Consider carefully.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Things might not turn out as you planned. Don't expect everyone to accept your latest ideas as they may have concerns that you didn't anticipate. Avoid giving someone the cold shoulder due to a minor disagreement.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) You might forget about romantic togetherness when someone introduces you to something new and different. Get a boost of confidence by meeting people outside your normal circle and embracing new perspectives.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Budget your time as well as your money wisely. You may be tempted to splurge on a hobby or take risks. Do whatever is expected but don't go to extremes just to have an after-noun indulging in fun.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Clear your head by clearing the decks – if your home or office has become disorganized, this might be a good time to remedy the situation. Avoid making major purchases or investments for the next few days.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Make the best of the current situation even if you are feeling controlled by others or by circumstances. Don't consider giving up something that is dependable as a rock for something that leaves you climbing a slippery slope.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Learn from criticism – it's a golden opportunity if you just deconstruct the situation and don't shame yourself. Don't make a big decision when you're in an emotional state. You might feel more reflective than usual.

OUR CHANGING LIVES

Each new season reminds us that we can't hold onto time... How do we let go of one season and successfully move onto the next? We can share the joys and sorrows with others on the same journey. With help, we can embrace each phase of our life and prepare for the next. God's wisdom can guide us through our seasons and help us be prepared. Worship at His house this week and find fellowship and faith to help you on your way.
